Does that mean that the Church should simply recognise social change and either change its teaching or shut up? What the Church in Ireland has been weak on is that of presenting in a convincing way to our younger generations the values which underlie our teaching on marriage and the family.”

Now is our opportunity to respond and be part of the conversation of the Synod in October. On Wednesday night we will look at the following questions which have been drawn out of those from the Synod. Again the purpose of the discussion is to look at ways in which the Church as a community of faith, guided by compassion and understanding.

The questions are as follows:

PRELIMINARY QUESTION:

Does the final Synod Document offer an adequate account of marriage and the family in the Irish context or does more need to be said?

Questions for Groups:

How are people being helped to see the value of lifelong commitment in marriage? What more could be done? (This reflects questions 10-17 of the original list of questions)

How are people being helped to understand that a relationship with God can help and enrich marriage and that the grace of the sacrament of marriage helps to sustain couples in lifelong love? (This reflects question 11 of the original list of questions)

How can couples living together be encouraged to enter into marriage in the Church? (This reflects question 22 in the original list of questions)

Do couples in the early years of married life need more support? If, so, what? (This reflects question 31 in the original list of questions)

How can the Irish Church respond compassionately to people in irregular unions while remaining faithful to the teaching of Christ and the Church? (This reflects question 35 in the original list of questions)

How can the Irish Church respond better to lesbian and gay people and their families? (This reflects question 40 in the original list of questions)

What more can we do to prevent abortion and foster a genuine culture of life? (This reflects question 44 in the original list of questions)

How can parents and the Christian family be made aware that the duty of transmitting the faith is an intrinsic aspect of being a Christian? (This reflects question 46 in the original list of questions)

The reference to question numbers refers to the questions in the full Synod documents. This is available together with the full text of Archbishop Martin's Address, and other material on the Parish website www.brackenstown-parish@gamil.com.

Pope Francis has opened up the Synod to every member of the Church. This is your opportunity to be part of the discussion, please add your voice.

Meet to Discuss the Synod on the Family
Wednesday 18th March at 7:30pm in St. Cronan's School Hall
All Welcome

Fourth Sunday of Lent      15th March 2015
THE SYNOD ON THE FAMILY

In the opening talk of our Retreat this year, Archbishop Martin spoke about the Synod on the Family the first part of which, took place in Rome last October. The focus of that Synod was to look at the challenges that families face around the world. The preparation for this synod involved a consultation of people in every country and every Parish. Brackenstown participated in this consultation and made a submission as part of the Irish contribution. The issues raised here are printed on the yellow sheets at the doors of the church, which also contain the questions for discussion on Wednesday night.

In his talk Archbishop Martin said “The world-wide consultation had shown that there was a strong recognition that the Church's teaching on marriage and the family is not easily understood in today's world, especially by young people. In today's culture, many of the classical terms regarding marriage and the family have taken on a different meaning in secular society.”

The focus of the Synod in October this year, is to discuss and put in place Pastoral supports for the family. Again Pope Francis has asked that as wide a group of people as possible be consulted and so we are gathering on Wednesday 18th March at 7:30pm in St. Cronan's School Hall, to discuss what supports we feel would be important to be discussed and adopted at the Synod. Again Archbishop Martin said “The strong message of the Synod was a call for a radical renewal of the Church's pastoral support for marriage and the family. In the pluralism which exists today in every part of the world we need a radical catechesis on marriage and the family. Marriage preparation is not just preparation for a Church wedding, much less a matter for filling-out canonical forms. Marriage must be understood as part of a life-long catechesis or itinerary of faith about the Sacrament of Marriage.”

At the Synod Pope Francis constantly stressed an image of the Church as a “field hospital on the scene of a battle”. At the field hospital what matters is the first contact with one who is wounded. It is not a place for diagnostics, but a place where people are taken up into the caring arms of someone, where their wounds are washed and cleaned and they receive a welcome of care and concern.

One Bishop took up Pope Francis' image of the Church as a “field-hospital” where wounds are healed, saying that too often the Church appears more like the city morgue where all the pathologies of the things that have gone wrong with the family are examined without emotion. That is something we must keep in mind in the way we reflect for the future. We should not get bogged down with problems, but bring a message of hope and encouragement.

In looking at the Irish situation Archbishop Martin reflected “The Church in Ireland for far too long started out from the position that the majority of Irish men and women understood and accepted the Church's teaching on the nature of marriage. For too long Catholics felt that the fact that Catholicism was the majority faith in Ireland and thus numbers were on our side and numbers were our strength. As time went on and the culture of Ireland changed, the numbers decreased and the cultural factors which affect all western countries are just as active in Ireland as elsewhere.
